

SCALE THREATENS TREES OF CITY

Chief Beauty of Plymouth Endangered---
Strange Pest Attacks Shade Trees---
Many Fear Lest It Spread Over Entire City.

Citizens of Plymouth have observed a strange pest which is attacking the maple trees of the city. No one seems to understand this new danger though many are alarmed about it. Miss Nettie Slough was the first person in the city to notice the depredations of the small enemy. Since the harm done has been pointed out our citizens are deeply concerned about it and no one knows as yet how widespread the scale has become.

The pest is a small bug about the size of a young potatoe bug. It attacks the bark and makes the tree bleed. The drippings of sap may be noticed on the sidewalks under the trees infested. One of the best places to make observations yet known of is at the corner of Michigan and Sophia streets.

The State Horticulturist has been written to in regard to the matter and his reply will be awaited with interest. Indiana has recently established a headquarters for its forestry department and will probably be able to give expert advice on this new danger which threatens one of the chief attractions of our beautiful city. Mayor Cleveland has expressed his willingness to take such measures as seem advisable to prevent the spread of the scale if it can be proven that the pest is a real menace to the city's shade trees.
